Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves within forest could spread kauri dieback.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors.
5. The West Coast and parkland is already at capacity from people from Auckland and further afield, with overflowing rubbish bins, parking blocking driveways and carparks full often from before midday.
6. The area cannot accommodate more visitors especially as the bylaw allows parking for days on end.
7. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked by vehicles, and freedom camping will make this worse.
8. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the Piha and Karekare areas.

- Piha Wetland, 42 Seaview Road, local park
- Marine Parade North, carparks on beachfront
- Marine Parade South, carparks on beachfront
- Glen Esk Road, eastern end carpark at end of road
- Karekare Road, Parking area at beach (partly road reserve)

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety. Campers using the dunes and bush as lavatories has been a persistent issue. Campers also use showers in the toilet blocks to wash and I have witnessed the use of hand basins to wash clothes and dishes.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves is an obstruction to the natural environment for which locals and visitors enjoy. It is urbanisation, we want to protect the natural values, remoteness and wilderness of the Ranges. Piha, KareKare and anywhere of remote beauty.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors and locals. I have witnessed Freedom campers set up their tables and chairs beside their campers. I have also witnessed very large vehicles taking up a lot of space. The car parks at Piha are under capacity for the amount of visitor as it stands.

5. The West Coast and parkland is already at capacity with visitors from Auckland and further afield, with overflowing rubbish bins, parking blocking driveways and carparks full.
6. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and the Piha campground is well facilitated for all campers, so it is not necessary to provide further sites.
7. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked by vehicles, and freedom camping will make this worse.

Piha - I just wanted to have my opposition to the proposed changes to freedom camping in Piha noted.

I have seen first hand the disruption some (currenty) ileagal overnight campers have caused including the following:

Littering, damage to fragile dunes and surrounding pathways by vehicles and foot traffic. Human waste. Dogs on the beach in the prohibited areas putting penguins at risk. Loud music into the night.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in:

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety because of lack of running water, lack of rubbish facilities, lack of security.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes damage and native vegetation damage. Increase in dogs which harms our bird life. Rubbish pollution in environmental sanctuaries will increase.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves in forest will help spread kauri dieback with increased foot traffic and saturation of people.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors and locals. And create unhealthy clustering in high volume areas.
5. This area already receives a very high visitation from people from Auckland and further afield, and cannot handle more visitors who will take parking space, block roads, use water, leave rubbish.
6. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked, so this is a added burden to a already summer saturated situation. It will need parking wardens and road safety will be compromised.
7. There is already provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is the perfect solution to avoiding all the other issues mentioned in my submission.

8. We are in a pandemic and if this is about a lack of housing freedom camping is no answer. It opens up to a host of other health issues like the spreading of the virus and transient people with no community incentives to act in the interests of place and people.

9. Garden road is a wahi Tapu and it contains very old heritage trees that need conscious communities. Freedom camping will compromise this.

10. Without support systems for managing freedom camping the toll and management will fall on locals. This is unviable.

11. Freedom camping isn't free there's a cost to the community, the environment and it encourages living in your car which we need to help families get out of not more deeply into.

12. Designated freedom camping area is way more sensible, practical and manageable. Please think harder before setting off a whole host of other issues.

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I am against the proposal for the following reasons:

1. We have a campground. This business will likely go out of business if freedom camping is permitted. I have heard arguments from freedom campers such as "since we aren't paying camping fees we can support the community at the cafe and the store". If one can afford to shop at the cafe and store, wouldn't it be better to support the local campground and bring their own food, rather than generate more income for the store and cafe and take that away from the campground?
2. We don't have enough facilities in Piha to cope with day trippers let alone overstayers. How will council cope with this extra influx? Are you aware of the instances when people have defacated in the dunes and left toilet paper behind?
3. Rubbish. Piha bins are overflowing and day trippers are leaving rubbish on the ground to blow away. How will the council cope with the extra influx of rubbish caused by campers? In addition to this, I noticed Anawhata is included in the freedom camping spots. Anawhata is not easy to access by any means, how can you ensure visitors will take their rubbish with them, or what is Council proposing to collect this rubbish from the beach and remove it?
4. Parking. There is not enough parking for day trippers. How will the council combat this, as well as campervans clogging up the carparks for two nights in each spot not allowing space for day trippers?
5. Ratepayers pay rates and these help to maintain facilities in Piha. Does this mean our rates will go up to cope with the extra strain on facilities by freedom campers? If they do not go up, I struggle to see how Ratepayers should be forced to have people who aren't contributing using facilities and parking directly in front of homes. If the freedom camping proposal is successful I will be requesting a rates rebate.
6. Restrictions. As I understand it, people can stay in one spot for 2 nights, then move to another spot, and so on. This comes back to the parking, rates and rubbish issues.

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

I am writing on behalf of the Waitakere Ranges Protection Society (WRPS) to submit on the Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw (Bylaw) prepared by Auckland Council. We want to emphasize the importance of the following points in regards to the recent proposed changes to the Freedom Camping Bylaw:- The WRHA is of local, regional and national significance due to its unique heritage features which include the prominent indigenous character of its terrestrial and aquatic ecosystems - Visitor numbers are growing and there is growing concern that unless appropriately managed may be to the detriment of other heritage features; ecosystems, wilderness, historic heritage values. - Freedom camping is of particular concern in the WRHA. Currently there isn't effective management of increased visitor recreational use of the WRHA, including campers, and the impact that increased freedom camping would have is a huge threat to the environment. - We do not see how freedom camping could be effectively managed and monitored in a way that wouldn't have a negative impact on the heritage area. The concerns years and have not improved.- The health and wellbeing of the heritage area, its ecological importance and fragility, must be prioritised over recreational use such as freedom camping that poses a significant negative impact.- We strongly consider that the WRHA is not a suitable place to allow for freedom camping of any kind, in any area that falls within the heritage area. Background on the WRPS The WRPS was incorporated in 1973. Its purpose is the conservation and protection of the Waitakere Ranges and to oppose any activity that may threaten or adversely affect the natural environment in the area, including the coastal and marine environment. WRPS and its members are strong advocates for the conservation and protection of the natural environment of the Waitakere Ranges and WRPS was one of the key groups promoting the concept of the Waitakere Ranges Heritage Area (WRHA) for 35 years before it was achieved through an Act of Parliament in 2008. The heritage area was put in place to recognise the areas national, regional and local significance, and to promote the protection and enhancement of its heritage features for present and future generations.

Introduction The WRPS welcomes the opportunity to comment on the bylaw. Freedom camper numbers are growing in New Zealand and obviously pose a concern for the WRHA. We understand that there are limited spaces in the Auckland Region for freedom camping and currently not enough to meet demand. We also understand the difficult position that Auckland Council are in trying to balance protecting the interests of the community and environment whilst meeting the expectations of tourists and domestic visitors. Auckland's growing population however means mounting environmental pressures and challenges for the WRHA. Visitor numbers are growing and there is growing concern that unless appropriately managed may be to the detriment of other heritage features; ecosystems, wilderness, historic heritage values. The WRHA is of local, regional and national significance due to its unique heritage features which include the prominent indigenous character of its terrestrial and aquatic ecosystems. The WRHA contains approximately 27,720 hectares of indigenous forest making it one of the largest blocks of continuous indigenous vegetation remaining in Auckland. Two of the most significant wetlands in Auckland are also located within the heritage area at Te Henga / Bethells Beach and Whatipu. Detailed submission Freedom camping is of particular concern in the WRHA. Currently there isn't effective management of increased visitor recreational use of the WRHA, including campers, and the impact that increased freedom camping would have is a huge threat to the environment. We do not see how freedom camping could be effectively managed and monitored in a way that wouldn't have a negative impact on the heritage area. The health and wellbeing of the use such as freedom camping that poses a significant negative impact. Offensive behaviour by campers can include leaving rubbish, taking over public spaces, blocking views, making noise, using bushes and dunes as toilets, and damaging the environment. These concerns have been consistent over the years and have not improved.

For these reasons we strongly consider that the WRHA is not a suitable place to allow for freedom camping of any kind. We support and are pleased to see that freedom camping in vehicles has been prohibited at the sites listed in Schedule 1 for the Waitakere Local Board Area. However those three areas are simply not enough; we would like to see a blanket approach completely prohibiting freedom camping across the WRHA because of the ecological importance and vulnerability of the area. The WRHA is overall a sensitive location of high ecological, and heritage importance, and this is not recognised or protected for by this proposed bylaw. While we consider that most visitors will be respectful and follow the rules, adhering to the signs displayed at each site, not all visitors will do so. Enforcement will therefore be important to ensure compliance with the bylaw and avoid the risk of damage to the community and wider environment. We understand that the scope of the bylaw is limited to vehicles and does not address camping in tents. The issues of freedom camping in tents go hand in hand with those of freedom camping in vehicles. Equally we hope that Auckland Council enforcement officers enforce the Freedom Camping Act 2011 which makes it an offence for freedom campers to leave rubbish, human waste, and damage the area of the environment, as we understand that because central government has already legislated these rules that they are not included in the bylaw. See attachment for more info

I am writing on behalf of the Waitakere Ranges Protection Society (WRPS) to submit on the Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw (Bylaw) prepared by Auckland Council.

We want to emphasize the importance of the following points in regards to the recent proposed changes to the Freedom Camping Bylaw:

- The WRHA is of local, regional and national significance due to its unique heritage features which include the prominent indigenous character of its terrestrial and aquatic ecosystems
- Visitor numbers are growing and there is growing concern that unless appropriately managed may be to the detriment of other heritage features; ecosystems, wilderness, historic heritage values.
- Freedom camping is of particular concern in the WRHA. Currently there isn't effective management of increased visitor recreational use of the WRHA, including campers, and the impact that increased freedom camping would have is a huge threat to the environment.
- We do not see how freedom camping could be effectively managed and monitored in a way that wouldn't have a negative impact on the heritage area. The concerns around the negative impacts of freedom camping have been consistent over the years and have not improved.

- The health and wellbeing of the heritage area, its ecological importance and fragility, must be prioritised over recreational use such as freedom camping that poses a significant negative impact.
- We strongly consider that the WRHA is not a suitable place to allow for freedom camping of any kind, in any area that falls within the heritage area.

Background on the WRPS

The WRPS was incorporated in 1973. Its purpose is the conservation and protection of the Waitakere Ranges and to oppose any activity that may threaten or adversely affect the natural environment in the area, including the coastal and marine environment.

WRPS and its members are strong advocates for the conservation and protection of the natural environment of the Waitakere Ranges and WRPS was one of the key groups promoting the concept of the Waitakere Ranges Heritage Area (WRHA) for 35 years before it was achieved through an Act of Parliament in 2008. Freedom camping is of particular concern in the WRHA. Currently there isn't effective management of increased visitor recreational use of the WRHA, including campers, and the impact that increased freedom camping would have is a huge threat to the environment. # Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves within forest could spread kauri dieback.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors.
5. The West Coast and parkland is already at capacity from people from Auckland and further afield, with overflowing rubbish bins, parking blocking driveways and carparks full often from before midday.
6. The area cannot accommodate more visitors especially as the bylaw allows parking for days on end.
7. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked by vehicles, and freedom camping will make this worse.
8. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

Piha - Incorporated on 11 December 2019, the Piha Wetland Trust was formed by Protect Piha Heritage Society Inc, the Piha Ratepayers and Residents Association Inc , the West Coast Community Arts Trust and the Piha Kids Charitable Trust to represent the community in a partnership with Auckland Council for the long-term management of the wetland and old schoolhouse situated at 42 Seaview Rd, Piha. The Council had bought this property, which comprises a total of 1.867ha, from the Ministry of Education with a view to the restoration of the wetland and the building.

The Site

Although the Council is proposing that freedom camping is prohibited in parkland held under the Reserves Act, 42 Seaview Rd is held under the Local Government Act and hence a potential site for freedom camping under the proposed bylaw.

The site is largely wetland, although there is a grassed area with picnic tables next to the old schoolhouse. There is no legal access for vehicles to the site, and vehicles can only reach the grassed area with the permission of the adjacent landowner. While the Trust has this permission (as does Auckland Council Regional Parks for the purpose of accessing the Nigel Hanlon Hut) this does not extend to members of the public. However, we imagine that the grassed area, or even the roadside adjacent to the entrance to the wetland and schoolhouse, might seem an ideal location by freedom campers – near the centre of the village. We make the point that allowing any vehicles in the roadside area adjacent to the old schoolhouse would prevent legitimate access to the wetland site.

Freedom camping is currently prohibited anywhere in Piha, but it still occurs illegally. Where it does, mostly next to the dunes, toilet paper, faeces and general rubbish abound. We know this because the community, working through Pest free Piha, have recently removed more than 12,000 lupins from the dunes. We covered the whole dune area and know what is there.

Flooding

The wetland floods during extreme weather events, when the Piha Stream overflows its banks. This has occurred three times since 2017. Two of these floods were at the night. The Trust is prohibited by the building lease from using the schoolhouse at night for this reason. In addition, for the same reason, Auckland Council (regional parks) has prohibited camping in the adjacent area to the East that surrounds the Nigel Hanlon Hut. The Council has decided that camping at 42 Seaview Road is unsafe and to allow freedom camping there would be anathema, highly irresponsible and totally inconsistent with the Council's approach to the use of the wetland and old schoolhouse. More than that, it would be inconsistent with the Freedom Camping Act 2011 itself which requires the Council to be satisfied that freedom camping there would not pose a risk to the health and safety of visitors to the area, public access to the area, or the area itself.

The wetland is across Seaview Road from the Piha Domain and its campground. The area where camping is permitted there was recently reduced by the Auckland Council because of flooding risk which has affected its viability, something that would be further threatened by permitting freedom camping elsewhere in Piha. The campground is also a place where people who might otherwise freedom camp in Piha can stay safely given that a flooding assessment of the site has been undertaken .

Heritage Area

The Waitakere Ranges Heritage Area Act 2008 acknowledges the national, regional and local significance of the ranges, including promoting their protection and heritage features (including natural heritage). This clearly includes the wetland which is rare example of a diminishing natural resource within the city, not to mention the rest of New Zealand. The Act obliges the Auckland Council to have "particular regard" to the Act when exercising any power in relation to the heritage area. That means, all things being equal, environmental protection in the Heritage Area should be prioritised over the rest of Auckland. If freedom camping it to be allowed anywhere, it should be in the rest of Auckland, not the Heritage Area. Again, given the notorious behaviours of some freedom campers, including toileting, deposit of rubbish, fire-lighting, tree damage etc that would threaten the ranges' natural environment, freedom camping should be prohibited anywhere in the heritage area.

Prohibiting freedom camping in on the wetland site and adjacent areas subject to flf our submission above is not accepted and freedom camping is to be permitted in Piha, it should be prohibited in the following areas:

- 42 Seaview Road, Piha, Piha Wetlands
- 42 Seaview Road Road Reserve
- 50 Seaview Road, Piha, West Coast Gallery Road Reserve
- 21 Seaview Road, Piha, Piha Domain, Road Reserve

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves in forest could spread kauri dieback.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors.
5. This area already receives high visitation from people from Auckland and further afield, and cannot accommodate more visitors who will take up parking spaces for days on end.
6. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked, and freedom camping will make this worse.
7. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I feel strongly that the current Freedom Camping bylaw, designating areas that allow Freedom Camping, is much more suited to the conditions applying in the Waitakere Ranges Heritage Area than the proposed change to allow freedom camping on most road reserves and local park land, as of right.

1. I am permanently resident in Piha, so see first hand the pattern of visitor waves.

In the last few weekends, the carparking spaces on the beach front, from the far south to the far north, have been full, sometimes by 10am in the morning. And entrances to park tracks have been equally overwhelmed. This clearly and undeniably demonstrates the huge interest that Auckland's citizens currently have in visiting and enjoying their west Coast beaches and associated parks.

2. In these days of social media, word will quickly spread that campervans are welcome to park on the Piha beachfront and other park access points. Campervans are frequently very large truck sized vehicles, and occupants naturally spread themselves to occupy the area surrounding their vans with their camping tables, surfboards, bikes and other gear associated with camping and enjoying themselves outdoors.

I find the prioritising of freedom campers over Auckland citizens to be a highly undesirable and inequitable proposition.

3. Regardless of the rules that are supposed to be in place, I know from first-hand observations, that freedom campers prefer to occupy the one toilet block on mid-beach to do their washing and personal ablutions, hair-washing etc, so that they can avoid using their their own water and waste-water facilities, and so avoid having to refill their vans with water or empty septic holding tanks. The fact that this is against the rules will not stop this from happening.

Piha has a well appointed camping ground which is available throughout the summer season, with the revenue going to local operators.

4. The vast numbers of Aucklanders visiting the Ranges and associated parks and beaches is a trend that is here to stay, and likely to increase as citizens seek to find mental and physical health benefits in troubled and uncertain times. This trend has been particularly noticeable recently, and has probably not measured objectively by council teams. The increasing numbers have taken locals by surprise. I would urge first hand Council observations over the summer holiday period.

Anawhata and Karekare are equally impacted by this ever increasing numbers of day visitors.

In conclusion, I request that the Auckland Council retains the existing Freedom Camping regulations in relation to the Waitakere Ranges Heritage Area, and does not penalize its citizens in favour of Freedom Campers whose activities are most likely to result in exclusion of local visitors to the most desirable locations.

I believe that favouring freedom campers over local visitors will result in degradation of the areas where they park, through general wear and tear, pressure on fragile environments' flora and fauna, and blocking access to the most desirable amenities and locations.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves within forest could spread kauri dieback.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors.
5. The West Coast and parkland is already at capacity from people from Auckland and further afield, with overflowing rubbish bins, parking blocking driveways and carparks full often from before midday.
6. The area cannot accommodate more visitors especially as the bylaw allows parking for days on end.
7. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked by vehicles, and freedom camping will make this worse.
8. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Piha, Karekare and Anawhata - I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Piha, Karekare and Anawhata areas, that is, all roads from the intersection of Piha Road with Scenic Drive.

My reasons for this are:

1. Freedom camping already causes problems of health, hygiene and safety.
2. Freedom camping already causes damage and risks to the environment such as dunes and native vegetation.
3. Freedom camping in road reserves within forest could spread kauri dieback.
4. Freedom camping at beachfronts and entrances to tracks and beaches will block access for day visitors.
5. The West Coast and parkland is already at capacity from people from Auckland and further afield, with overflowing rubbish bins, parking blocking driveways and carparks full often from before midday.
6. The area cannot accommodate more visitors especially as the bylaw allows parking for days on end.
7. There are already issues with access for emergency vehicles such as fire trucks being blocked by vehicles, and freedom camping will make this worse.
8. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

I wish to see freedom camping prohibited in all road reserves and car parking areas in the road reserves in the Te Henga/Bethells area, including the Lake Wainamu Carpark, Te Henga Walkway Carpark and Bethells Beach Carpark.

I have lived in the Bethells area since 1986, and typically visit Te Henga and O'Neills at least once per week, all year round. Since the mid 1980's, there has been a steep increase in visitors to the area, reflecting an increase in population density in the greater Tāmaki Makaurau area in general. This increase in people visiting the area has brought with it a number of problems and complications, and I strongly believe that opening the area up to freedom campers will make these current, significant difficulties even worse.

1. Traffic volume and access. There is a constant traffic jam from just before Tasman View Road, all the way to the Bethells beach car park, from November to April each year. Vehicles are parked zig-zag across yellow lines, people move cones aside to park, people walk (including with young children) on the road to get to Lake Wainamu, Te Henga, or their cars.

This creates a hazard for pedestrians and people driving. There is no clear access for emergency vehicles, creating a major safety hazard. Often, local community members take shifts in 'traffic patrol' to move cars along to avoid gridlock. People who live locally cannot even access their closest beach, due to the volume of cars and people. I have witnessed multiple small accidents (side swipes, people backing into other cars) due to too many cars in too little space. Having freedom campers added to the volume of vehicle and people will create further hazards (accidents, no emergency vehicle access).

2. Rubbish. Due to the increased volume of visitors, there has been a very significant increase in rubbish left behind in the car park, on walkway, roadways and the beach. I cannot count the number of times I have collected glass bottles, pizza boxes, plastic bags, items of clothing, drug paraphernalia (nags) and other rubbish from the Te Henga / Wainamu area.

This obviously very harmful to our fragile ecosystem. Adding overnight freedom campers will clearly increase the amount of rubbish being left behind and this is completely undesirable.

3. Lack of sanitation facilities. At present, from November to April each year, the single shower by the Te Henga beach entrance is already overly busy, leading to a huge, festering bog of stagnant water sitting in a huge puddle across the toilet block entrance. Having freedom campers there (even when self-contained) will inevitably lead to more dirty water running off from the showers, and this will most likely be contaminated with shampoo and soap. It is easy to put up signs advising freedom campers to use their own shower, however in actual fact, it is impossible to ensure that people will actually stick to the rules. Furthermore, at present, the toilets are often in a filthy state (particularly with the sanitary bins overflowing) and again, freedom campers will inevitably use facilities, which will add to the mess. This is likely to further worsen the state of the lagoon, which is already so contaminated with e-coli and other toxins that it is never clean enough for safe swimming. The available facilities simply cannot cope with more (semi-permanent) visitors.

4. Environmental damage. Te Henga beach is a fragile ecosystem, with dunes, dune vegetation, dotterels nesting on the beach, and frequent sightings of seals and penguins. Due to the current volume of visitors, this fragile ecosystem is already on the brink of being overrun. Each year, dotterel chicks lose their lives to off-leash dogs (despite multiple warning signs). People also run all over the dunes (despite warning signs). People do not follow rules printed on a sign. Adding freedom campers into the mix will increase the volume of people, thereby negatively impacting on the dune ecosystem and on the native fauna

(dotterels) trying to survive.

5. Fire risk. There is a significantly increased risk of fire by allowing people to spend the night.

Again, warning signs do not deter people from acting in the moment. Only yesterday (28 November 2021), a camp fire originating from Muriwai Beach caused 25 hectares of vegetation to be burnt down at Woodhill, and we do not want this risk at Te Henga or Lake

Wainamu. https://www.rnz.co.nz/news/national/456736/firefighters-and-threehelicopters-

battle-woodhill-forest-fire

6. Noise pollution. Since the increase in visitor numbers, there are numerous people who bring large portable stereo speakers to the beach and lake. They play very loud music in total disregard of the fact that other visitors may not want to hear their music. It is very likely that allowing freedom campers will increase the noise pollution, particularly late at night, affecting homes closer to the beach area.

7. Other campsites are already available. There is provision for camping by campervans within regional parks and at the Piha campground so it is not necessary to provide further sites.

In summary, at present, the Te Henga / Lake Wainamu area is already unable to cope with the volume of visitors, creating traffic hazards, blocking emergency vehicle access, leaving rubbish behind, damaging the ecosystem and overwhelming the toilet and shower facilities. Freedom campers would make the current problems infinitely worse, and in addition, create a fire hazard from camp fires. There is daily evidence that the general public do not follow rules printed on a sign, and it is unlikely that freedom campers would be any more responsible than the general public.

I therefore strongly oppose permitting freedom campers on the Te Henga / Wainamu area.

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas should be available for unlimited or indefinite freedom camping

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule?

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule?

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

Freedom camping should not be permitted in any part of the Waitemeta Local Board area. I have witnessed dozens and dozens of "self contained" camper vans parked on the streets around Basque Park, and have also seen many of the campers use the park for toileting purposes. There are no facilities. There is no enforcement. It is a health hazard.

Just to be very clear - my issue is with campers, not homeless Aucklanders sleeping in their vehicles.

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

Please include Basque Park in your scope - and do not allow freedom camping in the area.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you want to comment on why you don't know? I'm not personally affected by freedom camping/ability to freedom camp, but I wonder if it's still an issue in 2021, considering the lack of international tourism.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule?

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: It is not necessary to impose basic rules on freedom campers everywhere in Auckland

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? No – freedom camping vehicles should not be required to be self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: The kind of vehicle used for freedom camping in Auckland should be a personal choice, Using a vehicle that is not self-contained does not pose a risk to the environment or public health and safety, The cost of buying, hiring, or converting to a self-contained vehicle is too high, and that could mean some people can't afford to freedom camp in Auckland

Another reason (please explain):

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – freedom campers should be able to stay for an indefinite period in the same road or off-road parking area (no maximum stay rule)

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: No maximum stay gives campers the best opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? No – freedom campers should not have to leave by a set time (no set departure time rule)

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: Not setting a departure time will be more convenient for campers, and make it much more likely that they will visit local businesses

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? No – freedom campers should be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area at any time (no no-return period rule)

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you support the no-return period rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: Not setting a departure time will be more convenient for campers, and make it much more likely that they will visit local businesses

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: Campers should have the right to come back to favourite places during their trip. Not setting a departure time will be more convenient for campers, and make it much more likely that they will visit local businesses

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: There are better ways to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause? Stop freedom camping.

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain)

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain): They shld not b able to freedom camp in any vehcal.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule?

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule?

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas should be available for unlimited or indefinite freedom camping

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of one night in the same road or off-road parking area

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: Vehicles are required to have three days' onboard waste storage per occupant, so a one-night maximum stay will help encourage responsible dumping of waste, A one-night stay still gives campers some opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses, but this is less of a priority than protecting access for other users of public space

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? Yes – freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view: Having a set departure time will help with enforcing the maximum stay rule

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? Yes – freedom campers shouldn't be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area within a two-week period

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you support the no-return period rule because, in your view: A two-week non-return period helps prevent people staying in one area long-term, which protects access to shared parking and amenities for other users

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

The rules are irrelevant without enough people to enforce it and without a penalty. What happens when people do NOT abide by the rules? The usual New Zealand punishment, i.e. nothing, nothing and more nothing or maybe a wet piece of paper?

Some of these idiots are ruining our country, one day at a time, one selfish asshole at a time.

You also need heaps of trash bins and to make sure they are disposed of at least once daily. If you don't people will just throw their trash onto the reserves, street, or just out the front door of their vehicle. I have seen it too often. There needs to be huge fines involved and to be able to confiscate their vehicle if it is an on-going issue.

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

The fines are far too small and there needs to be a minimum fine they have to go to court. There is no way someone should be able to walk away for under $2000.00 plus court costs. The spot fines should be $500 and be able to collect immediately. If they cannot pay, the vehicle can be confiscated. We also need enough people to enforce the laws. IF no one enforces them, then NZers will never, ever obey them. Ever. Unfortunately, NZers are the trashiest people I have ever seen. I have lived in 20 countries and NZer rates the highest for leaving their crap everywhere and for criminal aggression for bringing it to their attention.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

Fully support the general rules, particularly the two night maximum stay. uncomfortable with proposed sites, particularly Coxes Bay, other cities in the world don't allow free camping so close to the city centre, I'd suggest free camping be kept 15-20km from city centre/densely populated urban areas. We have hostels and paid for camp grounds if people want to stay closer.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: Another reason (please explain)

Another reason (please explain): Personally I agree we should protect areas and restrict freedom campers ability to negatively impact an area.

If a space has toilets that can be used and a drain for grey water (serviced) I don't feel campers should have to have a self contained certificate. If someone just needs to sleep in their car somewhere over night I feel anyone has that right without fear of a fine.

A 2 night maximum stay i think is a great idea, with vacate by times and no return by date also. This will stop people squatting effectively, can't "set us a home base" etc.

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained UNLESS staying in a serviced area (noting that there are no serviced areas in the current proposal)

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view:

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view: A two-night stay will prevent campers staying in an area longer-term, blocking others' access to parking or other amenities, A two-night stay gives campers more opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

$200 dollars is i think too high for someone who spent their night in a car somewhere, perhaps too tired to drive, over the limit, random 1 night stay somewhere, $200 waaaay too high, its more than a hotel room!

BUT if someone is caught or suspected of toileting, damaging the environment, culture, disturbing people $200 could be increased.

So in summary the fine amount should be situational

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Without general rules, there is a risk that any problems caused by freedom camping could move fr

Another reason (please explain): DOC and commercial operators make available ample good camping facilities throughout the region. Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

The general rules are good but achieve nothing without enforcement. There are unscrupulous campervan companies that fit a portable toilet in a sealed bag, state it is self contained but offer a refund if the seal is not broken when the vehicle is returned. These don't comply as self contained however their client base doesn't care because their motivation is to minimise cost. They will avoid or break rules if they believe they can do so without penalty. The issue is not with the law abiding, it is with those who don't care about the rules

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

I strongly support the enforcement powers and if anything would prefer stronger powers

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: There are better ways to prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby, It is not necessary to impose basic rules on freedom campers everywhere in Auckland. Another reason (please explain)

Another reason (please explain): Why would you attempt to refuse access to these locations - especially those with public toilets nearby, such as Point Erin, Devonport etc. If there is ANY issue in these areas then the obvious solution is to built bullet proof, concrete and steel toilets that CAN be used by Freedom campers - and ENCOURAGE them to stay in locations where there is free parking, without upsetting the locals - For example, I live close to Point Erin Park and have never had a problem with freedom campers parking there. Quite the opposite in fact, they are often keen to meet the locals and engage in conversation. You should be ENCOURAGING Freedom Campers not stopping them!

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby? It's obvious - Build MORE regulated and approved freedom camping sites WITH public toilets AND paid for SHOWERS. Make them MORE welcome so the DO use Regulated sites rather than block them out - and force them to look for unregulated sites!

Eden Park Car parks, Mt Smart car parks for instance, Rugby club car parks etc - for overnight parking ONLY. Allow sports clubs to charge for the use of the Showers and toilet facilities - and then OFFER the car parks to ensure freedom campers use those places, rather than just park wherever they wish!

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-serviced areas, Although council has not identified any serviced areas in this proposal, I am aware of serviced areas on public land which should be included, Although no serviced areas have been identified in this proposal, providing sites suitable for non-self-contained vehicles should be a priority for council, It makes sense to match our self-containment requirements to the National Standard, It would be too hard to enforce the self-containment rule without referencing the National Standard. Another reason (please explain)

Another reason (please explain): Why make it difficult to police - How are you going to know that someone stayed in the same car park less than two weeks previously for example - fewer silly rules make it easier to obey the obviously needed ones!

The fewer intelligent rules the better. Fines should be nominal, easy to pay instantly, (portable eftpos only available to approved/certified staff to avoid fraud and/or theft) and extreme leniency should be observed (we don't need the parking Nazi's to go mad issuing fines) - we want to welcome visitors, and encourage them to enjoy their stay!

They do no harm in this area - and it is close to the bridge, nice walks, restaurants, public houses and bars, and the CBD by bus. I live nearby - and have always believed this car park is underused over night and is a perfect location for Freedom camping! The toilets already exist - but perhaps a shower block would make sense. I have had Campers park outside my home, and couldn't care less - I enjoy meeting them, they are invariably agreeable people, and they stay a few days and are gone!

Where is the problem?

Make the locations more accessible - build toilets and shower blocks but charge them if necessary!

It should always be free parking here - as a lot of Pacific Island families fish from this location - and that is always fun to watch and chat with them! (I walk in this area regularly).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle, It makes sense to match our self-containment requirements to the National Standard

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? Yes – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view: Vehicles are required to have three days' onboard waste storage per occupant, so a two-night maximum stay will help encourage responsible dumping of waste, A two-night stay will prevent campers staying in an area longer-term, blocking others' access to parking or other amenities

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: The general rules will unfairly impact some people

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule?

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

I object to the Council's proposal in its entirety in regard to opening up the streets of Auckland to Freedom Campers. Freedom Camping on residential streets is not appropriate. The Council's General Rules will be ineffectual and also unenforceable and in practice will not protect residential streets and roads.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas should be available for unlimited or indefinite freedom camping

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: It makes sense to match our self-containment requirements to the National Standard, It would be too hard to enforce the self-containment rule without referencing the National Standard

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? Yes – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view: A two-night stay will prevent campers staying in an area longer-term, blocking others' access to parking or other amenities, A two-night stay gives campers more opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses, Shorter stays are already the norm for most freedom campers, so a stricter rule is not necessary

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? No – freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 10am on the day of departure

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: A later departure time will be more convenient for campers, and make it more likely that they will visit local businesses, If freedom camping starts to cause problems somewhere, this is better managed by putting extra restrictions just in that area, rather than having a stricter general rule

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? Yes – freedom campers shouldn't be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area within a two-week period

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you support the no-return period rule because, in your view: A two-week non-return period helps prevent people staying in one area long-term, which protects access to shared parking and amenities for other users, Having a shorter no-return period means campers would be able to return to a favourite place if they wa

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: There are better ways to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, There are better ways to prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause? By providing specific, monitored camping designated areas specifically for freedom campers.

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby? By requiring specific licences for the vehicle and occupants.

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule?

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule?

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule?

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

Do you have any comments on these other parts of the Bylaw, or any other feedback you would like to give us?

I would like to see heavy penalties for breaching the bylaw - including impounding of vehicles, large fines ($1000+) to act as a deterrent. I am concerned about freedom camping being used by the homeless - (which is a significant issue that needs greater consideration in Auckland)

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle, The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-s

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain)

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain): The maximum stay rule for designated Freedom Camping sites should ONLY be one night . Freedom camping should be prohibited in all residential streets.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain)

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain): Freedom camping in designated areas should vacate by 7.30 am at the latest.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? No – freedom campers should be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area at any time (no no-return period rule)

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-serviced areas, and council has not identified any serviced areas in this proposal, It makes sense to match our self-containment requirements to the N

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain)

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain): I think three nights is more reasonable, but it depends on how popular the area is.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? No – freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 10am on the day of departure

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view:

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: A later departure time will be more convenient for campers, and make it more likely that they will visit local businesses, 10am is a typical check-out time if you are paying for accommodation, so it makes sense to align with this, If freedom camping starts to cause problems somewhere, this is better managed by putting extra restrictions just in that area, rather than having a stricter general rule, Having a set departure time will help with enforcing the maximum stay rule

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? Yes – freedom campers shouldn't be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area within a two-week period

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you support the no-return period rule because, in your view: A no-return period will help with enforcing the maximum stay rule

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: Without general rules, there is a risk that any problems caused by freedom camping could move from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle, The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-s

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule?

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of one night in the same road or off-road parking area

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule? Yes – freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Do you support the set departure time rule because, in your view: 9am would be more convenient for campers than 8am, but still protects access to shared parking or amenities for other users during standard business hours

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? Yes – freedom campers shouldn't be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area within a two-week period

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and carparks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I do not support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view: There are better ways to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, There are better ways to prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby, It is not necessary to impose basic rules on freedom campers everywhere in Auckland, The general rules will unfairly impact some people. Another reason (please explain)

Another reason (please explain): Blanket rules on everyone to stop a few causing problems is restrictive to those who are respectful of the area

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause? Provide toilet facilities at sites - have public pay showers in central areas like at libraries . Provide a facility for people to take their rubbish. Cctv for security and help identify people not behaving respectfully

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby? Be proactive in helping people causing problems as they are probably homeless and struggling - they need support more than restrictions - too many people can't afford rent - so tackle housing and employment and living wage, free education and help people move on if they want to. Most people would probably prefer an affordable safe warm room than a car.

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people? Blanket rules restrict leisure users and don't allow for use if space is available

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain): Toilet only requirement - but even people in fancy mohos don't always use their loos because they don't like having to empty them! # Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

Note: this version of the feedback form has been created for the purpose of publishing submissions. As such, contact and demographic information has been removed and handwritten submissions have been transcribed.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle, The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-s

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? Yes – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view: Vehicles are required to have three days' onboard waste storage per occupant, so a two-night maximum stay will help encourage responsible dumping of waste, A two-night stay will prevent campers staying in an area longer-term, blocking others' access to parking or other amenities, A two-night stay gives campers more opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses, Shorter stays are already the norm for most freedom campers, so a stricter rule is not necessary, If freedom camping starts to cause problems somewhere, this is better managed by putting extra restrictions just in that area, rather than having a stricter general rule

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? Yes – freedom campers shouldn't be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area within a two-week period

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Do you support the no-return period rule because, in your view: A two-week non-return period helps prevent people staying in one area long-term, which protects access to shared parking and amenities for other users, Having a shorter no-return period means campers would be able to return to a favourite place if they wa

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule?

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed no-return period rule? No – freedom campers should be able to return to stay in the same road or parking area at any time (no no-return period rule)

No – I support another no-return period rule (please explain):

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: Freedom campers should be subject to some basic rules wherever they stay in Auckland – no areas should be available for unlimited or indefinite freedom camping

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule?

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of one night in the same road or off-road parking area

No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain):

Do you support the maximum stay rule because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view: Vehicles are required to have three days' onboard waste storage per occupant, so a one-night maximum stay will help encourage responsible dumping of waste, Requiring vehicles to move on the following morning will prevent campers from blocking others' access to parking or other amenities during the day, and prevent longer-term stays, A one-night stay still gives campers some opportunity to enjoy the area and support local businesses, but this is less of a priority than protecting access for other users of public space

Another reason (please explain):

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Do you support the proposed set departure time rule?

No – I support another set departure time rule (please explain):

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Signage will have to be very clear and refer to the 3 categories. Existing signage will have to be replaced which I have seen referring merely to "overnight parking" which is not the intended subject of this.

The rules should encourage the use of urban car parks which are little-used at night and close to businesses which are open early and late. This would require a "one-night" rule for 9am departure but with return allowed after working hours. This means that "campers" would enjoy the rural areas during the day but return at night to give business to urban areas which are better lit, more secure and often have toilet facilities nearby.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Without general rules, there is a risk that any problems caused by freedom camping could move fr

Another reason (please explain):

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think we can prevent any problems caused by freedom camping moving from regulated areas to unregulated areas nearby?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained UNLESS staying in a serviced area (noting that there are no serviced areas in the current proposal)

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view:

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Do you support the proposed maximum stay rule? No – I support another maximum stay rule (please explain)

Is this because, in your view:

Another reason (please explain):

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

Another reason (please explain):

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Is this because, in your view: The kind of vehicle used for freedom camping in Auckland should be a personal choice, Using a vehicle that is not self-contained does not pose a risk to the environment or public health and safety, The cost of buying, hiring, or converting to a self-contained vehicle is too high, and that could mean some people can't afford to freedom camp in Auckland. Another reason (please explain)

Another reason (please explain): I have a certified self-contained vehicle, so I know from personal experience and anecdotally from others, that many people do not use their toilet in their vehicle. It's a hassle to empty and clean, and it's actually pretty easy to get by just using public toilets. The people who dump their waste or go to the toilet outside don't have any regard for the environmental or public health impacts, and self-containment rules aren't going to stop them. Better education and providing more facilities/keeping facilities open over night would be a better way to achieve the intended outcomes. Plus there are other bylaws that can be used to managed illegal dumping of waste.

Do you have any other comments on the general rules?

I know you state that homeless people staying in their cars will be dealt with using a compassionate or education approach, and that enforcement will be at the discretion of the enforcement officer but I just don't think this sort of approach is robust enough to ensure that the rights of these vulnerable people are safeguarded. Removing the requirement for self containment would make a big difference to prevent homeless people being targeted or wrongly penalised.

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Without general rules, there is a risk that any problems caused by freedom camping could move fr

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Reserve land has been excluded from the scope of the proposed Bylaw. This means camping at Auckland's reserves will continue to be managed under the Reserves Act 1977. The Reserves Act 1977 already prohibits all camping on reserves unless specific approval is given. You can find out more on our FAQs tab on the right side of the page.

General rules

About general rules

The Freedom Camping Act 2011 gives people the right to freedom camp on public land.

However, the Act also allows councils to make reasonable rules to protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access to shared space.

We're proposing four general rules that we think will:

- encourage responsible freedom camping and provide a reasonable minimum level of protection for most public places in Auckland
- make sure people can't move a short distance from a prohibited or restricted area to camp somewhere without any rules, as this could just displace any problems to adjacent areas
- make sure we're not limiting people's right to freedom camp any more than is necessary and justified under the Act.

Proposed general rules for Auckland

The four general rules we're proposing are:

- Freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle (the 'self-containment rule')
- Freedom campers must stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area (the 'maximum stay rule')
- Freedom campers must vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure (the 'departure time rule')
- Freedom campers must not return to stay in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks (the 'no-return period rule').

Our rationale for each of the general rules we're proposing is summarised under the question relating to that rule.

Where the general rules would apply

The general rules would apply in any area that is covered by the Bylaw, except for:

- designated areas where freedom camping is prohibited (listed in Schedule 1)
- designated areas where freedom camping is restricted (listed in Schedule 2), as these areas have their own specific rules.

This means the general rules will cover most public roadsides and car parks in Auckland. Note: any existing rules that control parking in these places – for example road markings and parking restrictions – still apply to freedom camping vehicles.

The general rules would not apply in areas that aren't covered by the Bylaw, including areas:

- on private property
- not managed by council (for example motorways)
- managed by council under other regulations (e.g. land held under the Reserves Act 1977).

Do you support the use of general rules for freedom camping in all areas not otherwise prohibited or restricted?

I support having general rules

Do you support having general rules because, in your view: General rules are a reasonable way to protect Auckland's environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause, Without general rules, there is a risk that any problems caused by freedom camping could move fr

Do you not support having general rules because, in your view:

How do you think we can better protect the environment, public health and safety, and public access from the problems freedom camping can cause?

How do you think the general rules will unfairly impact some people?

Do you want to comment on why you don't know?

Self-containment rule

We propose that freedom campers must use a certified self-contained vehicle to stay in any area covered by this rule.

This means that the vehicle has been inspected and certified as meeting the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard (or its equivalent). To meet the standard, a freedom camping vehicle must have an onboard toilet and be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. To find out more about the New Zealand Self-Containment Standard, visit our FAQs page.

We consider freedom campers travelling in these vehicles can camp responsibly in most places in Auckland, because they don't require access to public facilities to meet their basic daily needs.

Campers in vehicles that aren't self-contained would be reliant on Auckland's limited public facilities to meet their basic needs, and this poses a risk to the environment and public health.

It makes sense for us to align our expectations for vehicle self-containment with the New Zealand Standard. Referencing an existing certification process that is widely used by the industry and other councils will make compliance simpler for people who own or hire vehicles, including those from outside Auckland. It will also make checking compliance more efficient for our enforcement staff.

Do you support the proposed self-containment rule? Yes – freedom camping vehicles should be certified self-contained

No – I support another rule about self-containment (please explain):

Do you support the self-containment rule because, in your view: The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety, and shouldn't be allowed anywhere, on principle, The use of non-self-contained vehicles poses a risk to the environment or public health and safety in un-s

Maximum stay rule

We propose that freedom campers should be able to stay a maximum of two nights in the same road or off-road parking area, in any area covered by this rule.

A self-contained freedom camping vehicle must be able to store water and waste for its occupants for at least three days. Having a two-night maximum stay will encourage campers to move on and dump their waste responsibly.

A two-night maximum stay also helps to prevent campers from staying in one parking area long-term, which could impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

We think two nights strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors to Auckland time to explore and enjoy an area and support its local businesses.

Set departure time rule

We propose that freedom campers should have to vacate their parking space by 9am on the day of departure, in any area covered by this rule.

We think 9am strikes the right balance between protecting public access and giving visitors a more enjoyable experience during their stay in Auckland.

A set departure time of 9am ensures turnover of parking spaces, protecting fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of an area during standard business hours.

Having a departure time rule also supports the enforcement of the maximum stay rule, by making it easier to determine whether someone had intended to stay another night.

If freedom camping starts to cause problems, we think this is better managed by putting extra restrictions in that area (by designating it in Schedule 2 of the Bylaw).

Note: areas with high traffic volumes before 9am will usually have parking restrictions in place, and freedom camping vehicles must comply with these.

No-return period rule

We propose that freedom campers can't return to stay overnight in the same road or off-road parking area for two weeks, in any area covered by this rule.

We think allowing people to return to an area after two weeks strikes the right balance between protecting public access, and allowing campers to return to a favourite spot during a longer stay.

A no-return period helps to prevent campers from moving their vehicle a very short distance to get around the maximum stay rule and stay in one location for long periods. Long stays impact fair access to shared parking and amenities for other users of the area (including other campers).

Proposed new Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw 2021

We asked for feedback on an earlier version of this Bylaw, in 2018-19. After considering feedback, the council decided to develop a new Bylaw proposal. From October 26 to December 5, we asked the public to tell us what they think of this new Bylaw proposal.

We wanted submitters views on whether we have the balance right – between providing a safe and enjoyable experience for freedom campers visiting Auckland and protecting our environment, health and safety and access to public space for everyone.

Our Freedom Camping in Vehicles Bylaw will set rules for freedom camping in a vehicle on most council land in Auckland to protect:

- areas that are environmentally or culturally sensitive
- the health and safety of freedom campers and other users of public space
- access for everyone to our public places, facilities, and amenities.

The Bylaw:

- identifies areas where freedom camping is prohibited
- identifies areas where freedom camping is restricted and sets the specific rules that apply in these areas
- sets general rules that apply in all other areas covered by the bylaw (including most roads).
