2915	Mighty River Power Limited	Support	5431-9	Horticulture New Zealand: Pukekohe Vegetable Growers Association	General	Chapter A Introduction	A1 Background	Amend 1.6 'Our Economy' to read 'Auckland's rural areas also contribute significantly to its economic success. Auckland has high quality soils, water resources, transport linkages, gas supplies, post harvest facilities, access to labour and a diverse land parcel structure that support agricultural and horticultural activities. Fruit, vegetables, livestock and forestry supply our domestic and export market. There are also as well as substantial mineral resources. In our coastal environment, aquaculture provides opportunities for sustainable economic growth. The Hunua and Waitakere Ranges in turn provide a significant amount of the water resources for the urban area while surface and groundwater resources support rural economic success.'
2915	Mighty River Power Limited	Support	5431-16	Horticulture New Zealand: Pukekohe Vegetable Growers Association	RPS	Issues	B1.1 Enabling quality urban growth	Add new text 'There are long-term consequences of prolific subdivision across rural areas, the fragmentation of productive land, the domestication and commercialisation of rural landscapes, the introduction of sensitive land uses into working environments and the inefficient use of developable land. Inappropriate choices on greenfield expansion will also compromise regionally significant rural production systems. Around 5.5% of New Zealand's productive land resource is versatile land. Versatile land is land suitable for high value horticultural production because it has a range of enabling factors such as high quality soil, water, frost free climate, shelter, access to labour, transport, close markets and an enabling rule framework that discourages subdivision and land fragmentation.'
2915	Mighty River Power Limited	Oppose in Part	5431-17	Horticulture New Zealand: Pukekohe Vegetable Growers Association	RPS	Issues	B1.1 Enabling quality urban growth	Add new text 'Between 1990 and 2008 29% of New Zealand's available versatile land has been converted to new urban areas. Urbanisation is a trend that is unlikely to be reversible. Marlborough (59%), Hawke's Bay (49%), Waikato (36%) and Auckland (35%), have seen the highest level of conversion. Planning mechanisms focussed on soil protection have been unhelpful because they indirectly target the problem which is subdivision for rural residential purposes. There are two things that are required to prevent further degradation of the versatile land resource: Maintenance of an operating environment that encourages rural production activities on versatile land, and Prohibition or prevention by other means of subdivision for rural residential purposes on versatile land. Greenfield expansion must not compromise the regionally significant rural productions systems. Inappropriate choices could lead to the removal of versatile land from the production system or constraints on production activities, through reverse sensitivity effects, particularly at the RUB interface.'
2915	Mighty River Power Limited	Oppose in Part	5431-21	Horticulture New Zealand: Pukekohe Vegetable Growers Association	RPS	Issues	B1.2 Enabling economic wellbeing	Add text to Rural and Coastal Economy section reading 'Auckland supports a Regionally Significant Rural Production system. The system is complex and diverse and involves a number of integrated elements. For example in the horticultural sector the production system requires access to land, soil, water, gas, transport linkages, post-harvest facilities, labour. Supporting rural production and the economic benefits it achieves is not just about protecting elements such as soil, it is about addressing the system as a whole.'

2917	Nicholas Hatch	Oppose in Part	5280-1	The New Zealand Institute of Architects	General	Chapter G General provisions	G2.4 Notification	Amend activity statuses to acknowledge that as the city intensifies a rules based system should give way to a more discretionary system. This should be implemented (i) by requiring a resource consent for more development proposals with a discretionary design review to be the norm for a greater proportion of developments; and (ii) by making more applications non-notified under the RMA and introducing a simpler, cheaper and less confrontational means of community consultation process outside the RMA framework.
